

THE PRE-ELECTION PROMISE.

By T. G.

Ye candidate is here again, with sycophantic smiles,
To practice his symbology, the gullible to guile.
The world is just a little thing he holds within his fists,
And assuringly he tells you, it will bend the way he twists.
He will surely be elected, and when all the votes are in.
His plurality will startle other men who hoped to win.
None can down his optimism, he'll be ruler of the roost,
That's his pre-election promise for a pre-election boost.

With his arm across your shoulders, he will beg you to imbibe,
While he opens his hot air valves in a ceaseless diatribe.
Then he slips you a "Havana" of a vegetable brew,
With his second wind explaining just what he will do for you.
His pictures of the future have a rose glow that is great,

And the man would be a skeptic who would start to underrate

The power of the candidate, by healers introduced,
The maker of the promise for the pre-election boost?

No matter what the party, for the wonders as you know,

Will be done by those elected, for they all will tell you so.

Is there pessimist or cynic in the land who doubts the word

Of any of the candidates of whom he ever heard?
Is there idealist or dreamer searching for Elysium
Who will cease to be contented when election day has come?

We'll be happy as the angels, that's the reason now deduced,

From the pre-election promise for the pre-election boost.
